GRATITUDE OF A REPUBLIC

A PATRIOT is not without honor in his own country. Robert Morris, the man who financed the American revolution and sleeps in an unknown grave, is going to have a $5000 statue erected to his memory by a grateful nation. It matters not if hundreds of thousands of dollars have been squandered on less worthy objects, or that pension grafters have mulcted the American public out of hundreds of millions for home guards who never smelled powder or whose bravery was taxed beyond the labor of shouldering a training school musket of the innocuous variety from which the hammers are thoughtfully removed. These are mere side issues that should not be dragged into a case where the sovereign United States of America have decided on the philanthropic deed of spending the whole $5000 to perpetuate the name of the man who gave substantial aid to Washington when his beggarly army of loyal patriots left blood stained trails through the snowy wastes of Ohio, Pennsylvania and what now is the province of Quebec in Canada. Hungry, footsore, dispirited and almost disheartened, the revolutionary heroes would have endured sufferings for naught were it not for the treasure chest of Robert Morris, who gave freely of his belongings and possessions without receiving a scrap of paper in token of acknowledgement that the fires of patriotism might be fanned into life and kept burning by the hope of wresting independence from the richest nation on the globe.

Morris was the Morgan, Rockefeller and Rothschilds of his day. His entire wealth, estimated at $1,500,000, which constituted a fabulous fortune in those days, was placed at the disposal of Washington without any strings or stipulations attached. No guaranteed bonds were issued. The money was given cheerfully and with alacrity. The colonists had not planned on the cost of war. They had not time to organize any syndicate of bankers to float a war loan. The need of money did not become apparent until the war of the revolution was launched and, when the necessity became urgent, there was no one but Robert Morris to appeal to and he gave all he had. In addition he devoted his time and talents to devising ways and means to buy powder and lead, food for man and beast, and clothing to shield the ragged Continentals from the inclemencies of a rigorous northern winter. Robert Morris is to be honored.

God be praised! In this degenerate day, when England, the proud possessor of untold billions of securities, has to bow her head in humble submission to the bankers of New York in appealing for a loan of $250,000,000, it is worthy of note that the self satisfied England has to hypothecate collateral from Chile, Argentina, South Africa, Peru, Australia and Canada before the hard fisted bankers of the United States give ear to the appeal.

Robert Morris gave cheerfully, without asking for the scratch of a pen, and in the declining years of life was permitted, without protest from the United States, to occupy a debtor's cell. Morris was a member of the First Continental Congress and signed the Declaration of Independence. Then he took charge of the finances of the war. Returning from Congress in 1778, he continued his patriotic task, embarking much of his private fortune in the enterprise. In 1781 he established the Bank of Pennsylvania, the oldest bank in the United States. In 1787 he moved the nomination of Washington, and from 1789 to 1795 aided in arranging national finances. He steadfastly refused to hold office. After the war disaster overtook him and after spending three years in a debtor's prison he died in comparative penury in Philadelphia.

Republics are notoriously ungrateful. Who would be a patriot and rot in a debtor's dungeon? A $5000 monument, 140 years after, is a great incentive to loyalty.

HIGH COST OF PAPER

THE high cost of paper is making serious inroads into the profits of publishers, who are being pressed over the brink of prosperity into the poorhouse. The short supply of news print has brought about a famine so acute that the editors of the United States are earnestly discussing measures for restricting the demand to actual necessity. Metropolitan blanket sheets printing from 80 to 120 pages on Sunday are in most distressed state of mind, engendered by thought of bankruptcy. These gentlemen were in session for ten days before they agreed that, at the present rate of consumption, the entire stock would be consumed in less than six months. Production is limited by the shortage of chemicals used in bleaching the pulp. Germany is the source of supply, and to replenish the stock required for a normal consumption of paper would keep a hundred Deutschlands busy for a year. Waste is the crux of the situation. Publishers everywhere have resolved to curtail their printing to actual paid up circulation, dispense with the return privileges of newsdealers and limit the exchange list to indispensable newspapers. Such is the resolve of a majority of American newspapers and magazine publishers, in which the Bonanza is in full accord.

If Congress really stands for retrenchment and abolition of the war tax, this is the time to check many of the abuses that have grown up in the government printing office at Washington. In campaign years it is not unusual for the national managers to order speeches of favored sons by the million, for which they are charged cost price. This is in addition to the speeches authorized by Congress on request of members who wish to impress their home folks with their eloquence in the national forum. Campaign year means carloads of waste paper, since even the most popular publicity managers estimate that not one in ten printed documents is read. The government printing office has ordered an increase of 16 per cent on all campaign literature, which is supposed to represent the actual advance in cost. This increase will apply only to orders filled from the government's present stock of paper. There is consolation in the fact that voters will not be bombarded with wads of stuff that were shot at them in former campaigns and that the postoffice will not be congested to the extent of interfering with paid business.

Let us hope tabloid literature will displace forensic frenzy with the belief that vest pocket brochures will be gratefully received by the overtaxed voter.

THE PITCHER'S BOX.

In Baseball's Early Days It Was Just a Line Twelve Feet Long.

Up to 1857, or for eighteen years after the first game of baseball was played, there was no limit to the number of innings, the first side scoring twenty-one runs, or "aces," as they were then called, being the winner. In 1857, however, the game was divided into nine innings. The pitcher had a line twelve feet long, kept behind it and could take a short run before his delivery, just the same as is permitted in cricket today.

In 1863 the old "line" for the pitcher to stand behind was done away with and the twirler limited to a "box" twelve feet long and four feet wide, but in this area he could roam at will and throw from whatever spot he pleased. A few years later the "box" was made six feet square, and in 1876 it was again reduced to four feet wide and six feet long. Ten years later it was made a foot longer, and a foot wider and in 1887 cut down in length to five and one-half feet.

These "boxes" being always a source of much change and discussion, they were finally abolished altogether and a rubber slab 12 by 4 inches took their place, the pitcher being required to keep his back foot against the slab. This slab was enlarged to two feet by six inches in 1895 and has remained the same since.—Philadelphia Bulletin.
